Help Children and Teens Stay Drug-Free

Kids hear about drugs everywhere, it seems. On TV, radio, the news, in music and movies. Sometimes on the street or on the playground.

Research shows that when parents tell their kids they don't want them to do drugs, the kids are less likely to do drugs.

The teen years are the most likely time for someone to start taking drugs. And starting drug use as a teen can lead to drug problems when they grow up.

There are many things you can do to help your children stay away from drugs and make good choices:

- Talk with your children about drugs. Explain how taking drugs can hurt their health, their friends and family, and their future. Tell them you don't want them to do drugs.
- Be a part of their lives. Spend time together. Even when times are hard, kids can make it when they know that the adults in their life care about them.
- Know where your children are and what they're doing. Keeping track of your children helps you protect them. It gives them fewer chances to get into drugs.

- Set clear rules and enforce them fairly. Kids need rules they can count on. That is how they learn for themselves what is safe and what can get them in trouble.
- Be a good example for your children. You might not think so, but kids look up to their parents. Show them how you get along with people and deal with stress, so they can learn how to do it.
- Teach your children how to refuse drugs. Kids often do drugs just to fit in with the other kids. Help them practice how to say no if someone offers them drugs.
- Make your home safe. Do not have people in the house who abuse drugs and alcohol. Keep track of medicines and cleaning products.

Talking to Kids About Drugs: What To Say if You Were Once Addicted

If you abused drugs at some time in your life, it might feel hard to tell others, especially your kids, not to do drugs. Everyone handles this problem differently.

If you choose to tell your kids about your drug past:

- Don't give a lot of details about your past drug abuse.
- Point out the problems your drug abuse might have caused. For instance, are there things you don't remember because you were on drugs? Did you fight with friends or family because of drugs? Did drug abuse keep you from saving money, getting better grades, or a better job?
- Explain why you wouldn't abuse drugs now.
- Say that you want your kids to avoid making the same mistakes you made.
- Be open to responses that your kids may have to your past drug abuse.

Parents who used to take drugs often don't talk with their kids about drugs at all. They're afraid the kids will copy what they did. But research shows that:

- When parents tell their kids they don't want them to do drugs, the kids are less likely to do drugs.
- Kids want their parents' advice about drugs.
